

Pei-shiuan Lin

Pei-shiuan Lin began her violin studies at the age of 3. She joined the New England Conservatory Preparatory School and played in the youth orchestras there. She won many international and local competitions, and she had the opportunity to play in Carnegie Hall, even playing with an orchestra. After her solo debut with the Lexington High School orchestra, she is now studying with Lewis Kaplan at Mannes School of Music for a bachelor's degree.

Throughout her career, Pei-shiuan also taught students, including students with disabilities. She enjoys sharing music with others and was co-leader of a music outreach program that performed regularly in the Lexington area. She also attended many summer festivals where she had the chance to study and take part in masterclasses with great violinists such as Yair Kless, Andrey Baranov and Charles Castleman.